Will (Santa Claus) Case Freed, Vows To Protect Yule Trees Next Season

GRAFTON, O. (U.P.)—White-haired Will Case, 84-year-old farmer who killed a man trying to steal one of his Christmas trees to cheer his children's gloomy Yuletide, is free because his victim's widow didn't want to "make him any more trouble."

Mrs. Mae Rosseau, who was wounded when her poverty-stricken husband was killed, told a Lorain county grand jury hearing manslaughter charges against Case that she wanted the charges dropped because she knew she and her husband were wrong in trying to steal one of his trees.

"He's an old man and hasn't long to live, anyway," she said. "Why should I make him any more trouble?"

"Anyway, anything I could do against him wouldn't bring my husband back, and wouldn't pay me for all the agony I've suffered," she said. "I'd rather forget the whole thing."

Case, known to children hereabouts as "Santa Claus" because he gives them nickels at Christmas time, killed William Rosseau and wounded Mrs. Rosseau when he caught them stealing a tree which he said later they could have had for the asking.

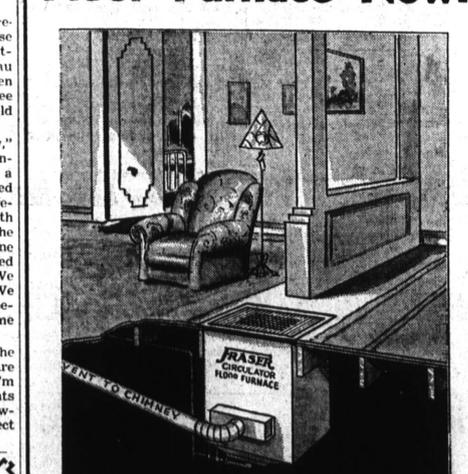

"It was all so unnecessary," Mrs. Rosseau said. "We had intended to ask Mr. Case for a tree. In fact, we had stopped at his place on our way to Cleveland. We knew him, for we both had worked for him. But he wasn't there. After we had done our little shopping and visited friends, it was pretty late. We didn't want to bother him. We thought it would be all right because he owed my husband some money."

Case, appearing before the grand jury, said he didn't care what happened, because "I'm getting ready to die." He wants to live until next Christmas however, and "I'm going to protect those trees."
